HELD EUCHRE AND DANCE.

A Number of Out of Town Guests Present and Report a Delightful Time.

One of the most brilliant social events of the season was the first annual euchre and dance given by the K. of C. boys in Kelly's hall last evening. AT THE THEATRE.

It is a pleasure to announce that J. C. Stewart's funny musical farce "The Two Johns" will be the attraction at the Monessen opera house next Thursday, Feb. 8. Musical comedies come and go but this farce has a wonderful hold on theatre-goers everywhere, which it will probably never lose. The company this season is said to be just first class in every respect, including such well known people as Albert Rice, Ned Curtis, Lou Morgan, Jessie West, Cassie Clifford, Chris Green, Marjorie Maxwell, Frank L. Brown, Carrie Barry, Harry Bulkley, I. F. Burns, Chris Stout, and others.

Albert Rice and Dan Anderson, who play Philip and Peter Johns, weigh nearly 400 pounds each, and must certainly cause laughter the moment they appear before the audience. This attraction will undoubtly test the capacity of the theatre, and judging from the business they have done in other places, we advise those coming to get their seats early.

Make your selection of any ladies' or childs' coat or fur in the house and pay only half price.—Janovitz. 83-3t

FOR NOT SENDING CHIDREN TO SCHOOL

Two Residents of Carroll Township Pay Fines Befor a Justice of the Peace.

Fred Horn and Robert Phillips, two well known residents of Carroll township were fined $2 and costs today by Justice S.E. Wilson, of Monongahela, for violating the school law by not sending their children to school.

The families reside in Carroll township in what is known as South Donora and for some time there has been a great deal of trouble in regard to sending the children of this section to school. On several occasions patrons of this section have been fined for violating the law. The residents of this part of the township are required to send their children to West Columbia, which they claim is to far, and consequently a number of the patrons have refused to send their children. Both men paid their fines today but assigned no particular reason for not sending their children to school.

With the Help of the Ghost

By TROY ALLISON

Copyright, 1905, by Homer Sprague.

Miss Wesley actually had begun to wish she could look older. To look forty-eight and look twenty-five is one of trials. In this instance it had its particular drawback—the colonel was fifty.

If the colonel had been less sure that the younger men of his set were altogether desirable and that the latter in every way suitable for her consideration as a husband, Miss Wesley might have been better pleased and prouder that would never have regretted looking young. As it was the colonel, although his military bearing and iron gray hair attracted attention under all circumstances, thought of his age and hesitated to ask the popular young woman to marry him.

The incident at the Mabreys' dance convinced Miss Wesley that she had given plenty of opportunities. It appeared necessary that she give him not only opportunity, but a helping hand. This, she decided, she was quite prepared to do. It only remained for her to decide the manner of its doing.

On the night of the dance he became nearer mustering the necessary courage than ever before, but just at the moment when the air became slightly charged with sentiment word died at Dr. Howell had come to their corner of the library, and the colonel, with almost imperceptible sigh, had said that young folks always had something to talk over and he would go get his segars and be off to bed as an old man should.

Miss Wesley felt a moisture in her eyes and decided, then and there, upon the virtue of the helping hand. There was only the question of when and how it should be administered.

The next week she announced her intention of going south to inspect some old family property that had been left to her six months before. All her life

The colonel stopped abruptly. "Terrible shock? No! What happened?" he demanded abruptly.

It seemed that Miss W man, left in town, had re from his fiancee, Celeste, giv details of the mysterious affair. According to Celeste's animated narrative, Miss Wesley had seen the fa and the shock had been to her. Her mistress' hair snow white from the shock.

The colonel looked startled, but she motioned him to keep still.

"She kept it dyed for—fourteen years," she continued, "and kept looking ridiculously young. She didn't mind that- except for the fact that the man she cared for was—fifty—and was afraid to ask her to marry him on account of the seeming difference in their ages."

The colonel again grew restive, but she held his hand fast and hurried over the rest of the story.

"It was Celeste's plan," she said, "and it struck my sense of humor very forcibly. Celeste has a dramatic soul she made the plan, and I acquiesced. You see, the poor old family ghost gave me an excuse for letting my hair be natural without people finding out that I had been imposing on the public all these years. Do you think you could care for a fraud?" There was a slight note of anxiety in her voice.

The colonel evidently could and would. He refused to obey the restraining hands, but took her in his arms triumphantly.

"We both needed the help of that ghost!" he exclaimed. "Long may he flourish in the realms of space! We'll never try to lay him!"

"After You, Gentlemen."

The French at Fontenoy, sheltered by the ridge, could scarcely believe their eyes at the sight of the English gunners slewing round their pieces to cover them. When they at length realized that it was one of the enemy's and not one of their own batteries the officers of the Gardes Francais rushed to the head of their men, shouting to them to deploy and charge the cannon. Almost at the same moment the grenadiers cleared the hilltop and began to descend upon him. It was then that occurred that wonderful meeting which has charmed so many generations of readers. Every one knows the description of the scene for which Voltaire has indebted to D'Argenson: how the French officers, in their lace and ruffles and their long scented vests and stockings, waited the approach of the gardiers, but in breathless how the Englishmen doffed their heavy fur lined caps, while Lord Charles Hay cried to the opposing line, with the words, "Gentlemen of the French Guard, please to fire first!" to which the Comte d'Auteroche replied: "Gentlemen, we never fire first. Fire yourselves!" Such was a battle of the grand age as pictured by the aristocrat who saw the universe reflected in the mirrors of the Oeil de Boeuf, but in the official papers there is a yellow letter written by Hay, in hospital after the battle, which gives a more modest, and it is to be feared, more natural version of the affair.—London Spectator.

Easy Enough.

"From time immemorial," said a little judge, "southern people have been lavish in bestowing titles. I think there is something in the southern temperament which explains this. I didn't intend to go on this, however, for a philosophical disquisition, but rather to tell you how a certain Kentucky gentleman established valid title to the rank of colonel.

"He went to Cincinnati once with a party of friends who enjoyed many acquaintances in the Buckeye metropolis and delighted to introduced him to every one as Colonel Brown. Everything went along smoothly until finally one Cincinnatian asked of the introducer:

'I suppose your friend, Colonel Brown, was in the Confederate army.'

'No, sir; he was not.'

'Well, then, he fought on the Union side.'

'No, you are wrong there too.'

'Oh, I see now. He got his title by serving in the state militia?'

'No; he never entered the militia.'

'Then how in thunder did he get to be colonel?'

'Why, he drew a sword, sir, at a church sale.'—Washington Post.

Couldn't Lift Ten Pounds.

Doan's Kidney Pills Brought Strength and Health to the Sufferer, Making Him Feel Twenty-Five Years Younger.

Sick kidneys cause a weak, lame or aching back, and a weak back makes a weak man. Can't be well and strong until the kidneys are cured. Treat them with Doan's Kidney Pills. Here's the testimony of one man cured.

J. B. CORTON.

J. B. Corton, farmer and lumberman, of Deppe, N. C., says "I suffered for years with my back. It was so bad that I could not walk any distance nor even ride in easy buggy. I do not believe I could have raised ten pounds of weight from the ground, the pain was so severe. This was my condition when I began using Doan's Kidney Pills. They quickly relieved me and now I am never troubled as I was. My back is strong and I can walk or ride a long distance and feel just as strong as I did twenty-five years ago. I think so much of Doan's Kidney Pills that I have given a supply of the remedy to some of my neighbors and they have also found good results. If you can sift anything from this rambling note that will be of any service to you, or to any one suffering from kidney trouble, you are at liberty to do so."

A FREE TRIAL of this great kidney medicine which cured Mr. Corton will be mailed on application to any part of the United States. Address Foster-Milburn Co., Buffalo, N. Y. Sold by all dealers; price, fifty cents per box.

Gone Into Oblivion

(Original.)

"He walked out of the house at the usual hour and has never been heard from since."

It is said that in the great city of New York this announcement is made frequently and there is one of these disappearances for every day in the year. When a thing becomes common it ceases to attract attention. But there was a time when this sudden walking into oblivion from New York made a great stir. That was when most of the people lived in little Dutch looking houses huddled about the Battery, when the French and Indians were troublous upon the border in the Mohawk valley and the gentlemanly pirate infested the ocean, making his shore headquarters on Long Island within half a day's journey by coach from the Dutch and English village.

Apropos of the gentility of piracy the farmers of Long Island considered the pirates making that coast a base quite an advantage. The "water merchant" was supposed to bury his treasures near at hand, and the farmer dug many a hole looking for it. An old historian has spoken of the pirates as "worthy gentlemen" and records that the famous Captain Kidd had for his associates Lord Chancellor Somers, the Duke of Shrewsbury, the Earls of Romney and of Oxford.

One night when New York had grown so far that Wall street was beginning to be a fashionable dwelling place there was a wedding in a house near the corner of Wall and Broad streets, on which latter street the Stock Exchange now stands. Stephen Winterton, a younger son of a British nobleman, was married to the beautiful Rebecca Van Flotter, New York's most engaging belle. A month after the wedding the groom walked out of the house and was never heard of afterward. When at nightfall he had not returned the young wife, becoming alarmed, sent word to the watch, who scoured the town without finding him.

The prominence of the family of the groom in England and of the bride in the province were alone sufficient to set all tongues wagging. But as weeks passed the burghers gradually ceased their clatter, and in time the young scion of a noble house was forgotten by all except the wife, who shut herself up and was never seen on the Battery, in Bowling Green, or even on the street. Whether or no any word ever came to her from her husband was not known—at least, outside her home. An elder brother of Winterton, Lord Boniford, came over from England to seek the lost member of his family. During his stay he lived at the home of his sister-in-law, whom he strove in every way to comfort. He went back to England without having found the slightest trace of his brother.

Five years after her husband's disappearance Mrs. Winterton went to England and was kindly received by her husband's family. After remaining for some time their guest she returned to America. A year or two later accounts came of a scout who had been shot by Indians near Schenectady which in some respects tallied with the missing man. The Van Flotter family did not hear of him until he had been buried some time. When they did they sent a man who had known Winterton to have the body exhumed and examined. The family's representative returned and reported that he believed the remains to be that of Winterton, though they were much decomposed. He had found the letter "W" embroidered on the shirt in which the man had been buried, and this tended to confirm his belief. The Van Flotter family announced that Winterton's body had been found, and thereafter they publicly considered him dead.

The announcement no sooner reached England than Lord Boniford started for America, and on his arrival there was a second wedding in Wall street in the same house as the first, Lord Boniford marrying his brother's wife. Since the marriage between a man and his dead brother's wife is not legal in England, the couple remained in New York till the death of the groom's father, the Earl of Scarsfield, which occurred a year after the wedding. Then the son, having succeeded to the title, took his bride to England.

When they arrived there it was supposed that they would seek recognition among the earl's friends. Contrary to expectation, they remained shut up on the estate, neither seeking nor giving invitations. This changed the attitude of their peers toward them, and invitations began to be sent them. Not one was accepted. They remained isolated, only going beyond the limits of their estates when necessary.

To say that Stephen Winterton was never heard from needs qualification. He was never heard from to the world. Two years after his disappearance a swarthy man partly in sailor's dress knocked at the back door of the Van Flotter home in Wall street with curios to sell. Mrs. Winterton was called, and as soon as the man was alone with her he handed her a letter addressed to her in the well known hand of her husband. Tearing it open, she read a farewell from Winterton stating that when he met her he was engaged in making money to replace what the laws of promogeniture denied him and after their honeymoon he had gone on a last voyage, expecting to be rich at its close and return to her. He had been captured by a war vessel and in an hour was to be hanged under the name of Hobson.

Long before the body of the scout had been exhumed near Schenectady Mrs. Winterton knew that her husband had died a pirate. The scout was used to cover a blemish on the good name of two families. WINSLOW HUNT.
